

FORECASTING OF EMISSIONS DURING ACCIDENTS ON AMMONIAC REFRIGERATION UNITS

Kudrashov A. N., Kotov S. G., Sazonko A. E., Saetchnikov V. A., Kotau D. S.

¹Department on Safe Operation in the Industry of the Ministry of Emergency Situations of Republic of Belarus

220108, Minsk, Kazinca str., 86/1

+ 375 (17) 398-33-17; gospromnadzor@tut.by

²Department of Physics and Aerospace Technologies

Belarusian State University

Minsk, Kurchatova str., 5, room 521

+ 375 (17) 209-58-33, + 375 (17) 398-58-73; saetchnikov@bsu.by

²Group of Planning, Command, Program, Ballistics and Navigation Providing

Department of Planning of Flight and Ensuring Management of BSC FCC

Scientific and Engineering Republican Unitary Enterprise "Geoinformation Systems"

220012, Minsk, Surganova str., 6

+ 375 (29)387-79-49; viscount.d@gmail.com

Abstract

In the report the method and algorithm of forecasting of a contamination zone under changing meteorological conditions during emission of the liquids boiling higher than an ambient temperature, compressed and liquefied gases is described, and also the techniques and algorithms allowing to calculate more precisely emission of these substances during accident on a chemically hazardous object.